A final year student at the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST), Nyameyie Wobil, has emerged winner of the 9th ARSO Continental Essay Competition 2021/2022.

Wobil's essay won the first position out of the many entries into this year's contest, which was on the theme: "The Role of Standardisation in Promoting African Pharmaceutical and Medical Devices Industries to Attain Self-reliance and resilience in Combating COVID-19 and Future Pandemics".

Ashesi University's Saralyn Ekuia Mansoa Donkoh and Charles Luaga Akpakia of the Regional Maritime University, emerged second and third respectively.

Speaking in an interview with the Digest Team, Mr. Wobil expressed his appreciation to the organisers, the Ghana Standards Authority (GSA), for providing him the opportunity to participate in the competition.

"I am highly delighted with this particular win that my works are being recognised and I can do more. This has been a great inspiration for me, and I know this motivation will make me want to do more," he said.

He is encouraging students to take particular interest in such educational contests to enable them to learn and improve on their area of study.

The Annual ARSO Continental Standardisation Essay Competition is aimed at empowering the African Youth to appreciate the role and importance, as well as the benefits of standardisation in facilitating sustainable development in Africa.
